

Writing a Will

A practical and positive way to provide for your loved ones

Having an up-to-date Will is the only way to guarantee you have a say in what happens to your estate after you die.

Some people understandably find it hard to discuss their wishes with family while they are alive, but having it all written down in a professionally drawn-up Will enables family to carry out your wishes – and not be left in any doubt as to what you would have wanted.

Having a Will also reduces the chance of family disputes, delays and confusion after you've gone.

Many people even claim that making a Will brings them comfort and peace of mind – not just for themselves but also for their loved ones around them.

Making a Will

The subject of writing a Will can appear complex, confusing or bring about concern but it's fairly simple, especially if you are working with a legal expert.

The wishes you'll want to make within your Will will be personal to you but we hope our step-by-step guide will help you to remember the little things, as well as the big things.

This guide includes tips on estimating the value of your estate and busts the myths surrounding Wills. We also hope to inspire you to imagine how your Will could help the people and causes you care about.

Preparing to write your Will

Top-ten questions

Preparing for your meeting with a professional Will writer will save you time, and money!

Being armed with the answers to the questions you are likely to be asked will ensure you're getting the most from your time with your solicitor.

How do you wish to share out your estate?

You might be considering giving an item of jewellery to a granddaughter perhaps, or a percentage share of the estate to your son.

What are your liabilities?

This is the money that you owe, such as credit cards, loans, mortgage. You need to subtract these from your total asset value to calculate your estate.

Will the value of your estate exceed the inheritance Tax threshold?

There are ways to reduce this: discuss it with your will-writing specialist.

Who are the people you would like to remember in your Will?

Remember, you have a duty to include dependants.

Is there a particular charity that you would like to benefit?

You will need to note down their full name, address and charity registration number.

What are your assets?

These are the things of value that you own. Property, cash, investments, vehicles etc. You need to work out a rough estimate on their value.

Who would you like to nominate as executors?

The people that will carry out your wishes according to your will.

Who would you like to choose as guardians?

Those that you wish to appoint to care for any children under the age of 18.

Will you need to include a trust?

Trusts can be used in situations where the beneficiary may need money to be held on their behalf.

Do you have any particular funeral wishes?

These can be included in your Will.

The Will-making process

Simple steps which make your wishes clear for the future

- 1 Prepare
- 2 Find a Will writer
- 3 Meet the Will writer
- 4 Check the Draft Will
- 5 Sign and witness
- 6 Store your Will
- 7 Review your Will

1 Prepare to see your solicitor. He or she will need some information in order to propose how best to arrange your affairs in your Will. Taking time to consider your wishes before the meeting will undoubtedly save time and maximise the time you have with your solicitor. Read page 2 for key considerations.

2 Find a professional Will writer If you don't already have a solicitor or professional Will writer in mind, we recommend visiting The Law Society website. You can search their online directory for Wills and probate specialists in your area.

3 Meet the Will writer At an initial meeting with your Will writer or solicitor you will discuss your circumstances and give them a rough idea of your wishes. They will then draw up a proposal, together with an estimate of charges. Feel free to ask questions and clarify issues you're unsure of. This is your Will and it's legally binding; it's worth taking the time to get it right.

4 Check the draft Will

On instructing your solicitor, they will draw up a draft of your Will based on the discussions you have and the wishes you want to include. If you have any concerns or would like to make changes you should raise them at this stage before the Will is finalised.

5 Sign and witness Once you are happy with your Will, you need to sign it, date it, and have it witnessed by two people not named in your Will.

6 Store your Will It is important to store your Will securely. Tell your executors where your Will is, so they can locate it easily.

7 Review your Will We would recommend reviewing your Will every three years just to double check it is still valid. There are many circumstances that may mean you need to update it. For example, a birth, death, marriage, retirement or change in wealth.

In summary

With good preparation and a qualified expert's help, drawing up a Will can be a relatively straightforward process that gives you a say in the distribution of your estate.

The cost of making a Will varies, and will depend on your circumstances and the arrangements you wish to make eg. adding a trust makes the Will more expensive to draw up. However a simple Will can cost as little as £100.

Having a Will is an investment; it may in fact save thousands of pounds. It's a document that may save your family from unnecessary distress and expense, and it will leave them without any doubt about your wishes.

Types of legacies

A legacy is simply a gift made in your Will

A legacy, also known as a bequest, is simply a gift made in your will to a person or organisation (such as a charity). There are several types of legacies that you can choose.

A residuary legacy is a gift made after any debts are paid. You may choose to leave a percentage of the residue to charity. This way, the value of your gift increases with inflation.

A pecuniary legacy is a fixed sum of money. Unlike a residuary legacy this will not fluctuate in line with your wealth, so it may be worth reviewing it from time to time to check it still reflects your wishes.

A specific legacy is a gift of a particular item, such as a piece of jewellery, furniture or a painting. You could also consider directing a death-in-service benefit or bequeathing stocks and shares to a loved one or favourite cause.

A life interest or trust beneficiary

A life interest or trust beneficiary is the person or organisation who will benefit from a trust set up in your Will. A trust can be used both to benefit a primary individual, and a nominated charity as a final beneficiary.

We recommend taking advice from a solicitor or professional Will writer if you are unsure which type of gift to choose.

Your Will can help the world

Every minute of every day, someone is helped by a Catholic charity

Your Catholic Legacy brings together a group of Catholic charities working to inspire and encourage you to leave a gift in your Will to a Catholic good cause.

Whether they are a parent struggling to take care of their family in Newcastle or Nairobi, a parishioner finding hope in God's word in Lymington or Lima, a prisoner or a patient, a priest retiring from his life of service, a seafarer thousands of miles from home or a community who have lost everything in a natural disaster, millions of people around the world depend on the support of Catholic organisations.

Catholic organisations rely upon the kindness of the Catholic community to fund their life-saving and life-changing work.

Legacies help to bring hope to thousands, life-saving aid to those most in need, and God's love in times of crisis.

Writing a Will and including a gift to charity is a wonderful way of providing for the people and causes you care about. Alongside your family and friends, might you also be able to help your brothers and sisters in need, and the Church that's shaped your life?

By remembering your favourite causes in this special way, you can be sure that your faith and values will live on for decades to come.

After providing for family and friends, a legacy, large or small, will help to make the world a better place for future generations.
